

Growing Up With Pets Fact File: *Finding a Pet that Fits in the Family

Pets fit comfortably into the family portrait. As playmates and loyal companions, fourfooted friends are often a child's first friend. But families must do their homework before bringing home a furry friend. "Decide what your lifestyle can handle," suggests Gary Holfinger, DVM, chairman and founding member of the Companion Animal Parasite Council. "Never buy a pet on the spur of the moment or because you like the looks or breed."

Is the time right for a new pet?

Ask yourself these questions before searching for a four-footed family addition:

- Are your children old enough to exhibit self control and do they understand "no?"
- Is there an infant in the home who will require full attention?
- How much free time do you have?
- What is the reason you want to bring a pet into the home?

Are you getting a pet for the right reason?

- Do you have the time and money to properly care for the pet?
- Do you want the pet for yourself or the child? Parents generally bear 80 percent of the responsibility.

What would be the best breed?

- Hunting breeds like to chase. Terrier breeds often are high-strung.
- Avoid an aggressive protection dog, which might harm a child it is "protecting."
- Larger dogs work well with children, but they require more maintenance.
- Consult the library or resources like Novartis Animal Health Canada, Inc. (www.novartis.ca), The Humane Society of Canada (www.humanesociety.com) or your local branch of The Humane Society.

Additional Tips for Choosing a Pet

- Involve the veterinarian. Ask for advice and prevention tips.
- Bring the children. Observe how they interact with the animals.
- Take your time. Decide whether the pet will fit into your lifestyle. Don't make a snap decision.
